KOENIG, (FNU), w/a "Gustl", Real name: KOENIG, Gustav

A report dated in November 1948 stated KOENIG was born 1 June 1897 in Berlin and his present whereabouts and if still living was unknown. He has been a member of the KPD since 1930 and was also a member of the Rote Hilfe. Reported as an early member of the military organization and apparatus of the Communist Party. In 1921, he was a functionary of the Waffen Apparat and "OD" (Mil. Pol. App. der "Proletarische Untersekretariat"). In 1922 KOENIG had close contact with the "Tscheka" agent KOBELZSKI and was East military "Oberleiter" for a planned uprising in either Berlin-Brandenburg or Western Germany. Following this he was very active in various apparatus such as the ND, Waffen Apparat and AM Apparat, where he used numerous cover names. From about 1928 to 1931 he worked for the "Klara" Apparat, kept contact with an informant within the German Navy and was probably used by an international apparatus because he left Germany very often. From 1932 to 1933, KOENIG was a member of a terrorist organization, probably the Diversion Apparat of the Soviet Military Espionage Apparat "Klara". KOENIG remained in Germany until about 1934, at which time he emigrated to Czechoslovakia via KUCHENBERG. Reported to have attended the AM school and to have travelled extensively. Reappeared in Berlin in 1936 and was probably working for a Soviet Apparat. KOENIG was no politician; however, he was very dangerous and a strong follower of the Moscow line.

Born 1915, place of birth unknown, height 1.75 m, slight build, brown hair, thin face with pale complexion, occupation, officer in the Abwehr Amt II T. In 1943 was reported to be assistant to Leiter, and was classed as a young and brilliant chemist, trained by Oberst b6 Deputy to Oberst b6 who was in charge of both QUENZ GUT and the TROEL Laboratory (July 1943). In 1942 b6 instructed 8 saboteurs who were sent to the U.S. and probably b6 who was sent to the U.K.

b1

b1 The specific reports concerned are as follows:

a. From an article published in the 5 September 1951 issue of the German weekly newsmagazine "Der Spiegel":

"The question remains: How did WOLLWEBER (note: Ernst WOLLWEBER, the Communist marine sabotage expert and, until recently, Secretary for State Security in the GDR) find qualified replacements for his former colleagues after 1945 in order to build up a new sabotage group which could be trained sufficiently to operate on the former pattern?"

"Forty kilometers from the slip installation at the Peoples Wharf in STRALSUND, where a few months previously WOLLWEBER let the first ocean going ship of the east zone republic down the ways, there is located near the LADEBOW air field the former property of a one-time farm owner. At the entrance hangs today a metal sign: "Technical School of the Transport Ministry ("Fachschule des Verkehrsministeriums"), Marine Transport Department ("Abteilung Schifffahrt"). The students: specially chosen FDJ functionaries, but including foreigners with a northern accent and an active cadre of former non-commissioned officers and sergeants of the BRANDENBURG Division.

"Department Chief: Dr. KOENIG, former "Sonderfuehrer (S)" and instructor of the so-called "Kuestenjaeger-Abteilung (Coastal Troops Division)", special troops of the BRANDENBURG Division.

"On behalf of Counter Intelligence Department II ("Abwehrabteilung II") of the Supreme High Command (OKW) Dr. KOENIG, of Baltic origin, was training an elite group on the grounds of the Chemical-Technical Reich's Institute in BERLIN-Tegel; this group was to undertake essentially the same thing as WOLLWEBER's people; sabotage and explosion of shipping.

"About this a former member of the Coastal Troops ("Kuestenjaeger"), whose first action consisted of a successful attack against an Allied transport in the Italian port BARI in the summer of 1944, had the following to say: A saboteur must himself bring the explosive charge to the ship. He can hardly smuggle more than four pounds of explosive on board without being detected. He must place this amount so effectively that the blast of the explosion destroys the boilers and the succeeding boiler explosion severely damages the ship.

"Because, however, it was exceedingly difficult in hostile areas to smuggle explosives on board without detection, Dr. KOENIG developed, in cooperation with the Physics-Technical Reich Institute, a particular apparatus: the underwater-ring-attachment charge. It consists of an eighty pound heavy, hollow metal ring filled with explosives. The diameter of the ring was approximately 1.50 meters.

"To its underside eight magnets were attached. They held the explosive charge tightly to the outer skin of the ship to be blown up. The explosion, which was detonated by a clock-work fuze, blew a round section out of the ship's hull. The "Kuestenjaeger" was equipped with a swim vest in order to permit him to tow three ring-charges at one time.

"The magnets were strong enough to hold the charge even when the ship was underway. The detonation usually resulted on the high seas, upon proper adjustment of the fuze, rather than in the harbor.

"'Kuestenjaeger' instructor Dr. KOENIG also remained true to his field after the war. As a member of former "Kuestenjaeger" in western Germany are aware, he guided a number of his former comrades to LADEBOW near GREIFSWALD. From there they write recruiting letters to western Germany such as this: "You were also well taken care of with us and Dr. KOENIG. We are living here in a villa. We receive good pay and good food -- on Sundays at least chicken with rice."

b. From a pamphlet "From Bomb Mechanic to State Secretary (Vom Hoellenmaschinisten zum Staatssekretaer) published in 1953 in BONN by the "Freiheit Aktion der Jugend":

"It was also mentioned that these agents were sometimes brought in as supposed refugees from the GDR after they had been thoroughly trained at WOLLWEBER's special schools. These schools train the experts in the intelligence and sabotage agencies. After special courses at the KARL MARK HOCHSCHULE in KLEINMACHNOW near BERLIN the participants in the course go to LADEBOW near GRETESWALD. At this former university farm close by the fisher village WIEK exists since recently a "Technical School of the Transport Ministry ("Fachschule des Verkehrsministeriums") --Marine Transport Department ("Abteilung Schifffahrt"). There, however, one does not learn how transport services in the GDR can be improved but rather how one effectively destroys foreign ships, wharfs and harbor installations, however one 'salts' bunker coal with explosives and whether explosives with delayed fuzes are suitable for this or for that purpose. Whoever proves himself in LADEBOW as particularly adept may reckon with attendance at a course in GOLDBERG or WARIN where the last refinements for assignments abroad are taught. On the island GOLDBERG in the northern section of the SCHWERINER SEE --- WARIN is about 20 kilometers to the east and serves a similar purpose with similar means - there is a barracks camp for approximately 175 students and numerous full and part time instructors under Ernst BRUNDERT, a former merchant marine officer and member of the KPD since 1923. Here there are models of different types of ships and harbor installations and at least 100 foreigners - to say nothing of the Germans -- have been trained during the last year as sabotage specialists."
